St. Sinistra, 5 January

Dimsford House, London

Honored Lady,

It pleases Me that You have the Wit and Gumption not to feel obliged to wait on your Father's Permission to reply to my Letters. Of course He could not refuse You the Opportunity of writing to Myself, his new Friend and Governor.

While I customarily describe the Beauty of my little Kingdom, this Time I have less than good News to impart. Your Father has been taken ill of a wasting tropical Disease. My own Surgeon has reviewed his Condition and predicts that without loving Encouragement, He may not survive more than a few Months.

Dimsford, too ill to write Himself, begged Me to inform You, his only Daughter, of his Situation. With due Respect, I suggest that You take ship to St. Sinistra by the first Opportunity. I am convinced that the Sight of your beloved Face will dissuade your Father from his Melancholia.

I have instructed Capt. Bartholomew Davis, of my Flagship Lafond Deux, to deliver You to my grateful Charge; He should arrive in London directly after You receive this Missive. Pray accept this Banknote to defray the Cost of a new Wardrobe; any Guest of Mine must be suitably dressed.

Trusting that your Voyage will be comfortable, I am,

Your most sovereign Lord,
Governor of St. Sinistra,

Jean Lafond
